South Branch Pioneer Passes In West

William J. Floeter, South Branch Township pioneer, died suddenly August 18th while visiting his daughter, Mrs. Edith Prescott, in Tacoma, Washington. Mr. Floeter, born in Detroit on February 8, 1882, came to northern Michigan about 1900 to work in the woods. He worked in the lumber camps until 1907 when he took up farming in South Branch Township, Crawford County. He was united in marriage to Lottie

Dennsted in Grayling on August 8, 1913. The couple had eight children, four of whom survive. Surviving are two daughters, Mrs. Edith Prescott of Tacoma, Washington, Miss Grace Floeter of East Detroit; two sons, Edwin F. of South Branch Township, William C. of Detroit; one sister, Mrs. Bertha McGinnis, of Detroit; and four grandchildren. Services were held last Tuesday from the South Branch Church with the Rev. John Dosh officiating. Interment was in Pioneer cemetery under the direction of the Steuermann Funeral Home.

LUNCHEON AND SHOWER HELD

Mrs. Edward Rodda was the guest of honor at a luncheon and baby shower at the Hidden Valley Ski Club on Tuesday, August 20th. Twelve ladies gathered to entertain Mrs. Rodda, enjoy the luncheon, and to present her with many lovely and useful gifts. The occasion was a farewell gesture also, as Mrs. Rodda and her three children left the next day, Wednesday, to join her husband in Bay City where he has begun practice in association with Dr. Walter Stinson of that city.

FETED WITH LINEN SHOWER

National Asset Declining . . .

This country has a wasting asset—and, while it is a non-material asset, it is the most precious we possess. Its name is character, and in its decline we face the rapid deterioration of America. That sombre theme is powerfully argued by William Henry Chamberlin, writing in the July 13th issue of National Review.

Mr. Chamberlin points out that material wealth, in which we abound, may be deceptive. Great and rich empires of the past—such as the Roman and the Byzantine—proved far gone in decay when put to the test of unexpected crisis. Their resources seemed all but limitless, yet they were overcome and destroyed by barbarian tribes. We can and do point to all manner of achievements in wages, production and consumption, and so on. But there are other records which point in a very different and ominous direction. One of them is crime. Mr. Chamberlin quotes J. Edgar Hoover as saying that over 2,500,000 major crimes were committed in the United States last year—an all-time high figure. And an appalling percentage is committed by juveniles.

He then makes an interesting and significant commentary on the crime problem. It has long been argued that the seeds of crime lie in poverty and want. But no country in history, probably, has suffered as little poverty and want as we do now. Employment is at or near peak levels and wages are very high. Vast sums of money have been spent on slum clearance and on housing. Poverty, as it is known abroad, has all but disappeared here. Yet the crime rates soar—which, in Mr. Chamberlin's view, means that "the whole comforting environmentalist theory that crime is a result not of bad people but of bad conditions has been disproved."

These crime rates are not the only danger signs. We have, he feels, gone far along the road of the welfare state—and far away from the philosophy laid down by President Cleveland when he said that the people should support the government, but the government should not support the people. There has been a serious weakening of individual responsibility—and thus a serious increase in moral irresponsibility.

Mr. Chamberlin is convinced that this has in large part resulted from the influence of two men. One is Marx, who called religion the opium of the people. As Mr. Chamberlin puts it, "...man in the Marxian formula is stripped of human dignity and individuality. There is no room . . . for the agonized struggle of the individual to achieve goodness and shun evil." The other is Freud, the father of psychoanalysis. Freud believed that man's character is "irresistibly shaped by instincts and urges which are beyond the control of reason and conscience." The upshot of all this is that "there is now a shamefaced, apologetic attitude toward the use of such words as virtue and vice, good and evil."

Mr. Chamberlin's thesis is that the one thing no nation can afford to lose is the individual character of its citizens. He writes in conclusion: "To rescue the building of individual character from its present low estate . . . to make it a primary objective, is the searching challenge of the day to American homes, schools and religious communities."

The State Fish Hatchery was highly complimented by a New York State official on a visit to that place last Saturday, in his statement that it was the most natural layout of any hatchery he had ever seen in his travels throughout the states. He also stated that the city of Grayling was indeed fortunate in having such an attraction in their community, and should be proud of the fact that there was none in the state of New York that could equal its natural resources.

Fire of unknown origin Sunday afternoon destroyed the William Bigham barn in Maple Forest township, together with its contents. In the barn was one of his milch cows, the hay and forage crops from the summer's harvest, along with farm machinery, harness and farming implements. All were lost. The origin of the fire is unknown, except that it is surmised that it may have been caused by spontaneous combustion, due to the presence of new-mown hay in which there was some amount of moisture. Hay in such condition has been known to ignite and burst into flame.

In the latest issue of "Dramatics," is an item of interest to Grayling people; that concerns Rev. Ralph P. Claggett, a former Grayling boy. Rev. Although It's An Off Year, State Politics Still Creating A Stir

Hot Weather politics in this off-year is creating as much stir this early in the season as the urgent kind of campaigning when an election is a few months away.

Republicans are uncertain what political direction they took with House Speaker George M. Van Peursem.

Legislators thought it would be a good idea to send him on a speaking tour around the state to describe the virtues and accomplishments of the House and Senate.

That leaves Van Peursem with his tour for the legislature, the Republicans only academically concerned about a candidate this early, and Democrats with one, maybe two.

The timing can be as important in politics as in a symphony. For the first time in years, it may be the last moment before either party known who will carry its standard in the 1958 — or the 1960 — election.

Farmers Whose Crops were damaged in the heavy storms during the first two weeks in July are getting relief.

The Farmers Home Administration has asked that 12 counties in central and southeastern Michigan designated to receive emergency production loans at a low interest rate.

The loans will be made to individual farmers after they make application through a county committee to the state office in Lansing.

Stories came in from the affected counties to a state conference federal, state and local officials, listing the damage of the storms and heavy rains.

They told of up to 90 per cent the bean crop wiped out, 50 per cent of the hay in many counties, oats, barley, corn and soybeans all damaged.

G. Elwood Bonage, state director of the Federal agency, and list of the loans would be sought the fall or next spring, when the full effects of the summer's rains would be felt — financially.
